Infer and Predict Relationships

Inferring and Predicting Relationships involves using textual clues, character interactions, dialogue, and actions to understand character relationships and predict future events in a story.

Choose the correct answers based on the passage.

A Friendship at Crossroads

Mia and Jake were best friends, but lately, things had changed. Every time Mia tried to talk about how she felt, Jake would brush her off. One day, during lunch, Mia said, "Jake, you never listen to me anymore." Jake looked at her and said, "You always assume I don't care. Maybe you should stop complaining!"

1. What can you infer about Mia and Jake's relationship?

- A. They're close but struggling to communicate.
- B. They're no longer friends and indifferent to each other.
- C. They are new friends getting to know each other.

2. What might happen next in the story?

- A. They will get into a big argument.
- B. They'll ignore the problem and drift apart.
- C. They'll keep ignoring the problem and end the friendship.
