

Name _____

Date _____

Evaluate Generalizations in Informational TextsHow to Form Generalizations

1. Observe what the text says about a person, object, or situation.
2. Compare it to similar experiences, situations, or examples from your own life.
3. Form a statement that applies broadly based on the text and your experiences.

Read the text below and write logical fallacies and overgeneralizations in the text.

Text1 : Eating breakfast can help people focus better at school and work. Studies show that those who skip breakfast often feel tired and distracted during the day.

Logical Fallacy _____

Text2 : Many students enjoy playing sports at school because it helps them stay active and build friendships.

Generalization _____

Text3 : Dogs are loyal and affectionate companions. Many families choose to adopt dogs because they make great pets and bring happiness to their homes.

Generalization _____

Name _____

Date _____

Evaluate Generalizations in Informational Texts – Answer KeyHow to Form Generalizations

1. Observe what the text says about a person, object, or situation.
2. Compare it to similar experiences, situations, or examples from your own life.
3. Form a statement that applies broadly based on the text and your experiences.

Read the text below and write logical fallacies and overgeneralizations in the text.

Text1 : Eating breakfast can help people focus better at school and work. Studies show that those who skip breakfast often feel tired and distracted during the day.

Logical Fallacy If you skip breakfast once, you'll never succeed at school or work

Text2 : Many students enjoy playing sports at school because it helps them stay active and build friendships.

Generalization All students love sports and play them regularly.

Text3 : Dogs are loyal and affectionate companions. Many families choose to adopt dogs because they make great pets and bring happiness to their homes.

Generalization All families prefer dogs over other pets.